Entrepreneurs are born, they learn to use their innate talents, and then they succeed. But millions more entrepreneurs don't know what to do with the talent God gave them, because there is no formal system for identifying them. Preliminary Gallup research discovered that high entrepreneurial talent is much rarer than high IQ. Only five in 1000 people have the aptitude for starting and growing a business. Imagine how the world (replace "world" with "South Africa") could identify those with the right talent and get them in accelerated development programs. A very specific human talent will have new value and respect, because we can intentionally direct and control economic energy and subsequently the future of cities and nations."
